

Thinking of My Brain Cancer

Yaron Butterfield

I was recently diagnosed with GBM
Positive thoughts I will now send
And start to fight with all my might Eliminating this cancer in the end.

The surgery, radiation, and chemo
With this experience I will grow
Despite the pain
In my brain
My strength and hope I will show.

The fatigue makes life tough
Isn't the brain fog enough?
Now I forgot
My next thought
Only to remember other stuff.

Those genes: EGFR, IDH1 and MGMT
Mutations, methylations, and TMZ
A list of words
It seems absurd
What does it all mean to me?

I tap into the endless strands of energy
That exists throughout you and me
See myself healing
Cancer disappearing
Leveraging my innate neuroplasticity.

With continued research and many discoveries
Along with novel healing modalities
I am sure
We'll find a cure
Let's hope its soon, for us and our families.
